Trickster Tales Acrostic Poems

An acrostic poem can be read both up and down, and across. The letters of a source word, written vertically, are used in other words or phrases written horizontally, to say something about the subject.

Here's an example:

T ricksters!
 R ascals
 I nventing
 C lever
 K ooky
 S chemes
 T o-fool
 E veryone and avoid
 R esponsibility.

Create your own acrostic poems about famous tricksters from folklore.

I Dig Gardening

Infants: Plant a Little Seed

Over in the Garden by Jennifer Ward. Here's another counting book, a musical offering in the style of the folksong "Over in the Meadow." This version introduces readers to several garden insects, and the song invites participation by caregivers.

Books to Share

Little Rabbit's Snacktime by Alan Baker. Simple text and illustrations present Little Rabbit's search for a snack. Lift the flaps to see who's eating what, and where, to help motivate young children to focus on the book.

The Number Garden by Sara Pinto. Best shared with small groups or with caregivers and children sitting close to you, this 9" x 9" book heightens print motivation with flaps on each spread revealing an active garden scene.

One Little Seed by Elaine Greenstein

Music and Movement

Garden Glove Peekaboo

What you need:

- One unused garden glove for each caregiver in the group.

Give each caregiver a garden glove. Then lead caregivers in playing these simple games with their babies.

Early Literacy Rhymes

- Slowly, Slowly, Very Slowly
- Plant a Little Seed

Early Literacy Crafts

- Pretend Steering Wheel
- Interactive Trucks

Early Literacy Song

- Farmer Brown's Tractor
